An internal Times investigation, revealed in a report published Monday, found that the money was paid to Farrow not to confirm the Times' reporting but as a bonus to have the story appear in the paper. The revelation is just the latest misstep for the Times in its handling of the Kavanaugh story. In an April interview on ABC's This Week, Times executive editor Dean Baquet, at the time, defended the paper's decision to make the payment to Farrow, even though reporters for the Times said it was not to pay Farrow for his reporting, but rather for the promotion of the story. "Journalists and publishers have to understand that this world is going to be ever more competitive and we can't just all go live in obscurity and do our jobs," Baquet said. "And we have to figure out how to do these jobs without using the power of our brands and the power of f678ea9f9e
